in my studies of lucid dreaming and the like, I may have stumbled upon the real-life Backrooms.

>inb4 LARP

It only seems to work with Theta waves, and even then only on the brink of sleep. I wanted to try a cosmic, out-of-body thing, and that's how it first started.

While I was thinking about how I am not myself (in the dumb hippy way, spiritually, cosmic being), I began to fade into a kind of luke-bright light.

Pics related were the closest I could find, although it was more of a mix of the two, bright light at the end, pinkish-purple, and no gravity. Felt like I was falling forward forever.

Strangest part was that I randomly woke up, no reason, the theta waves and everything was the same. I think I might try it again.

Also for full disclosure, I drink, but I have never tried psychedelics or other drugs.

For now I'm calling it the "Luminal Road" until I can do it again and learn more.

I'm not fully sure what you mean by stuff from hyperspace leaking into lucid consciousness but according to this <https://www.dmt-nexus.me/forum/default.aspx?g=posts&t=62070> it eventually stays with you in some ways.

Imagine being a sheltered farm boy and venturing forth to the dangerous parts of the city after dark (but that might be a poor analogy as not every thug is connected to a crime underworld hivemind).

Listen to that guy's story <https://youtube.com/watch?v=os32tlzAm14> [\[Embed\]](#)

He's still in it, he's not against it so you can't say his account is biased negatively by a paradigm (like 'spirits bad demons bad don't do witchcraft kiddos'). The thing is he doesn't realize he's being duped but if you listen carefully in some later part (that's 1/4) the behaviour of the spirit he interacts with changes drastically. It takes away the affection and begins to provide it conditionally, in a calculated manner, wanting more humans to interact with it. People in the comments noticed the red flags, some even say that this thing is demonic because it acted so deviously. The 'shaman' himself remains duped but that means you can trust more in some things he's saying because he's not trying to make it sound bad to warn you.

Dissecting the experiences of others around you for life lessons is a very helpful ability as it can help you evade threats before they harm you. Both good and bad present itself as good. It always starts nice. I know I probably sound like fear mongering, jealous, puny man who doesn't get to have fun and prohibits others from having it but going out into shadier parts of town really isn't safe and I'd have a blood on my hands if I didn't warn you when I get the option to.

This is like the hand of god from berserk.

- > evil demon lords (no offence) who pretend to be good and control your life from before you can realize
- > reside in the deeper dimensions
- > lie and manipulate to get what they want
- > excessive pride and one thing about berserk is that the symbolism is manga actually exists from throughout the world and is used in the correct context. Maybe the person who wrote this comics had contact with similar entities.

This is aside from very triggering possibly it should be. Also another reason this is not endeavored is because if you try and think of sra if you are not at least aware of memory fragments or are still riding the unicycle of traumatic mind control. You may intentionally imagine things pieced and derivative of a fake imaginative thing in order to deflect from black fear endueced precognition repression/dissociation. I have memories that do not make sense from childhood. I have memory fragments that are gratuities to irl local digging of sra that even lines up with events now brought to light due to covid making people bicker and bring up shit from the 1990's to their spouse. The location is consistant with a google maps anomily that has since been corrected showing a masonic lodge in my county under the water by a bridge. I realized that bridge is the location of the memory fragment A the clown masked man in the back of the car/van going up dark to light and on the bridge 30 miles away from my town which has a simular bridge so i assumed the bridge was the local one. A pizza parlor is directly by the bridge that has stone brickwork a gratiut to memory fragment 2A the red brick archway and possibly torch or low lighting. Feel it had to do with a secret wall or hidden underwater dungeon access. Breif dungeon memory fragment C. Not much but smallish dungeon room and hellish things i can't think of because of the black fear.

So i am at the point i need to shake something loose. Now i have devised a personal shamanic system of vetting such speculuous remebering or trying to recall what sra was. I just wrote it out a couple of times. Only say what you know for a fact (to yourself or here i dont care lets shake this shit loose). If you have memories as a young child that make no sense or any low ceiling churchy memories of churches you never went to yet see in your town and somehow know what the inside looks like. Things like that.

also this is not something you want to have had happened to you. Don't try and think the pumpkin patch you went to in an early memory was sordid to feel cultured. Do it only if it was a memory you can remember yourself recalling earlier in your life. I call that mesurection. Because your whole life is shown to be a hiding of this. Very troubling. And fuck it make one up we (self sra memory crackers) should be able to know if its real or not based on whats real. This is going to be very improvisational and may be too personal as in only i can relate to memories i had. But themes and patterns may emerge if others have had similar experiences.

pic related. I had already came to the conclusion i was editing out my memories hence fragments. Very good overview of this kind of thing.

Life, death

DIRECTION OF SPACE-TIME EVOLVING

In a so called state of non-existence - or "nothing" - nothing can exist, meaning time doesn't exist in such a state either. Therefore, if death were to be a real thing, it would happen for the shortest amount of time possible, i.e. no time at all, and the existence would proceed on again.

If death were infinite "non-existence" of non-existence, we wouldn't exist at all right now, since infinity has no end. Since we've been born, this "infinite" death has an end, making it finite. To say one only gets one life is to be ignorant of the fact that when we die, we are not as dead as we are portrayed in the diagrams in this death state. Since the death state wasn't infinite before you were born, why would it be infinite when you die? You can objectively see you were "nothing" out of this death state once, yet why would it not re-occur if you end up in the exact same conditions when you die? Is this death state keeping on being "nothing"?

Conclusion: Life is infinite, just as matter can't be destroyed, only transformed, such is the same with consciousness.

Well, I would call this man a cryptid, but he is already confirmed by multiple civilian and government sources in Switzerland to exist. Pic related is Le Loyon, a man over six feet tall who roams the forest, simply observing people and acting similarly to Bigfoot sightings. He has never hurt anyone, and simply appears to want to be left alone. The police have attempted to speak with him (and have sighted him), but were unsuccessful.. The main question is why this man is in the woods wearing military equipment of the highest quality you can get in Euro countries. Does he fear something, does he know something?

Disclaimer aside, I work as a Head Orderly in an inner-city hospital in Detroit, Michigan. I will attempt to tell all stories to the fullest and truest detail, while omitting identifiable information where applicable.

Many of you may know the facts, realities, and situations herein all to well, but remember that not all have the same information. With that said, all contributions are welcome.

Now some basic vocabulary:

>Ward

An individual placed under the care of the State, Police, Hospital etc. for any of a variety of reasons, and who the warden has full responsibility and authority over.

>Petition(ed)

A legal act seeking the classification of a person as mentally ill by the State, and for that person to receive treatment by the funding of the same, usually made by Police or family.

I suppose it is best to start by explaining the general layout of the facility and the different places within it both to save time in future and to add to understanding.

The hospital is organized into three main sections, each added over time as the needs of the city increased and as corporate acquired more wealth. The first is the original component (East, West, and East II). This is still the primary residence portion for the poor, Negro, and more needy patients. The next is the North Tower, the newest addition that is primarily used as a separate space for the rich and favored, as well as outpatient services. The last is the Critical Care Building, which houses the Emergency Department (ED), the Intensive Care Units (ICUs), the OR, and most children's services.

There are other structures, locations, and sections of the hospital, but I will cover those as they appear and as they become relevant to the exploitation of the masses.

At last we come to a portion of this introduction with some substance, a brief description of the units and the shit that goes down there.

The 'Floors'

>1 North

Incorrectly named, this is simply the ground floor of the tower, and hosts most imaging services and test sites, as well as Nuclear Medicine. Despite (or in fact in light of) the fact that no patients stay here, it is one of the best places for them to be at any given time.

>1W

The Clinical Decision Unit (CDU) is a grey area, technically being part of the ED but located in the main hospital. It mainly serves as a way to placate lying niggers into staying one or two nights, then pissing off once the hospital can prove they're fine.

(Note: Nigger does not refer to a black necessarily, rather an ill behaved one (white or black). I will refer to civil blacks as Negros or by nothing at all.)

>1 East

A newly renovated and converted floor, it serves as the primary stroke unit (although de jure general neurology). It also has the concerning addition of built in monitoring cameras in every room, staring at you from the ceiling (yes, more on that later).

I've been subject to mind reading technology/abilities by aliens, one time when I was laying in bed letting my mind flow freely as it usually does, I suddenly started thinking of aliens and the most unbelievable thing happened to me, I was laying on my chest and my pelvis moved itself up by the means of telekinesis and I could feel my buttocks being fondled, and I could also feel my penis as it was taking place.

I hate talking about this because it is ridiculous to think about that not only would something like this happen to a person but the idea that the intetion behind it was sexual adds another layer of ridiculousness to the entire story and makes it even less believable. Shortly before the incident happened and I was thinking about how aliens wouldn't like me or something of that nature, I could feel something akin to a layer of non-tangible energy around my thoughts, I could quite literally feel my thoughts being monitored as I was thinking them. This incident, as unbelievable as it may seem, is completely true and has changed my perspective of life forever.

It isn't the only paranormal thing that has happened to me, but it is by far the most reliable piece of experience I have experienced in my life that proves the existence of the paranormal.

Anything else that has happened to me, could entirely have been a product of my own imagination, but this incident has had reality shattering repercussions in my life and no matter how much I tell myself that I might not be very sane there's no possible way in the world that I could subject my own self to telekinesis.

But there's questions that comes with the incident, who did it, why did they do it, how do they do it, and how do they look? These are answers I will likely never in my life get and I am destined to sit here pondering about it for the rest of my life without getting reliable answers to what might have happened that night. The paranormal exists, and I don't know for sure, but taking into consideration the fact that I was thinking thoughts related to aliens, and that the incident happened shortly after thinking about aliens, then based off of that alone I can only assume that aliens were involved in what happened.

I could be wrong since I don't know much about this, it could have been human technology that is just very confidential, I am not closing any doors for possibilities, but no matter what happens to me in the future I will always think back of that night and let my imagination play a part in rationalizing it. If you are one of those people who never have experienced anything paranormal and completely shut down any possibilities of paranormal events actually having existed in real life, then I am sorry to break it to you, but you are wrong.

Life for me after that night made me realize that anything in this world is entirely possible and I feel good that there are no limitations to the possibility of things that could potentially take place in our lifetimes. I, before that incident, had a connection with skeptics who refused to believe anything paranormal happened and just played around with the idea of things of paranormal nature existing for fun, but deep down I was a skeptic myself.

But now the circumstances of things that happened has made me completely lose any form of connection with the rational skepticism that takes place very often in the subject of the paranormal. I am not here to try and convince you of anything, and I surely cannot prove that it happened beyond my own words detailing the experience, but I do want to maybe tell you that life isn't as mundane as you might otherwise think and that there are definitely unexplained things that take place in the world that for the majority of people could only be considered to be fantasy.

I hate the idea that I could consider myself special because of what happened, I like to think that there are many others out there like me who have experienced things similar and just were unable to convince those next to them that it is the truth and have given up on trying to convince them of it, much like myself.
